Political Landscape:

Political Leaders:

Governor Mohammad Gulab Mangal (aka Golub Mongul, Gulabuddin Mongal):

Pashtun Mangal, born in Gardez, Paktia. Approximately 52 years old. Received B.S. degree in Literature from Kabul University. Worked in Interior Ministry under the Communist government during the 1970s. Participant in anti-Soviet jihad. Served as Head of Constitution Commission in the United Nations and as governor of Paktika from March 2004 to March 2006.

Previously governor of Paktika and Laghman, he was re-appointed as governor of Helmand on March 22, 2008 replacing Assadullah Wafa. His leadership as governor is considered to be among the best in Afghanistan since 2001, bringing experience and credibility on security and development issues to the job.⁴ He has proven to bridge the divide between the government and the people and his appointment to Helmand is anticipated to do just that with the Taliban. "Anyone who wants to lay down their guns and accept the Afghan constitution, values and current version of the administration can enjoy all the privileges of any Afghan. It's always been the policy.”⁵ Mangal has discussed plans to open a dialogue with top-tier Taliban, whom he described as “foreign-affiliated” and Al-Qaeda militants.⁶ His relationship with British in Helmand are very good and he comes well recommended by members of the international community.⁷

Former Governor Assadullah Wafa

As of February 29, 2008, Assadullah Wafa has been reassigned to the national government in Kabul as , perhaps due to perceived deficiencies in leadership. A replacement has not yet been selected.⁸ Becoming governor in 2006, Wafa was previously governor of Kunar, and before that, Paktia. He is widely viewed as conciliatory, negotiating both Taliban and Hezb-e Islami members into surrendering. He is from Spin Boldak along the border with Pakistan in Kandahar province, where his native Achekzai have been in competition with the Noorzai for supremacy. He has sons abroad in Dubai and elsewhere, and is evidently independently wealthy. He is in his 60's, and educated, although he speaks no English and speaks Dari rather haltingly. During recent operations in Musa Qala he demonstrated an extensive ability to multitask.

Deputy Governor Haji Abdul Satar Mirzakawal

Haji Abudl Satar replaced deputy governor Mullah Amir Mohammed in 2008. Satar has participated in agriculture reform projects in Garmser and police training programs since becoming Helmand's new deputy governor.

Deputy Governor Mullah Amir Mohammed - Deceased

Also known as Hajji Pir Mohammad. Originally from the Musa Qala area, his brother, a shura member, was still residing their during the recent episode of Taliban control in the district. He was killed January 21, 2008 by a suicide bombing at a mosque in Lashkar Gah.⁹

Chief of Police Mohammed Hussein Andiwai

Was targeted for assassination in Gereshk District on August 23, 2007 by anti-government forces, but escaped unharmed. Three civilians were killed, however, and 14 wounded. There have been a staggering number of assassinations of district police chiefs in Helmand. The previous police chief was Abdul Rehman Jan.

Human Terrain:

Alakozai: The Alakozai (Alikozai; Alokzai) form the majority of the population in Sangin District. They belong to the Durrani confederation, and can be further divided into the Khalozai (or Khan Khel), the Yarizai, the Surkani, the Kotezai, the Dadozai, the Khanizai, the Daolatzai (which are also found in the North of Afghanistan due to forced relocations in centuries previous), the Nasozai, and the Bashozai. The Alokzai people stretch from Farah to Kandahar, constitute a majority in the Arghandab District of Kandahar

Alizai: The Alizai mainly inhabit the North of Helmand, particularly Baghran, Musa Qala, Naw Zad, and Kajaki districts. They form a major branch of the Panjpay Durrani Pashtuns with two main sub-tribes, Jalozai and Hasanzai. Clashes between the Jalozai and Hasanzai have been a major source of tension in northern Helmand province. Present Governor Sher Mohammad Akhundzada is Jalozai while Abdul Wahid, a major figure in Baghran district, Helmand province is Hasanzai. The feud between Abdul Wahid and the father of Sher Mohammad dates back to the Jihad period.

Baluch: The Baluch, thought to number over a million in Afghanistan, are an Indo-Iranian ethnic group spread over Afghanistan, Pakistan, and Iran. Significant numbers also exist abroad. In Pakistan, Baluchi independence groups have look fought with Islamabad over the revenues from natural resources in Baluchistan. The capital of Pakistani Baluchistan is Quetta, where many of the Taliban are thought to have fled after their fall from power, but Kalat, further south, has traditionally been the seat of the Baluch Khans. The Baluch are overwhelmingly but not entirely Sunni Muslims. Their power-structures, based on the khan, are generally perceived to be more concentrated than those of the more fractious Pashtuns. In Afghanistan they are primarily nomadic, roaming the southernmost districts of the three southernmost provinces. In Helmand they are prominent in the Dishu and Garmseer districts.

Barakzai: The Barakzai Zirak Durrans mainly inhabit the East of Helmand, particularly Nahrisarraaj, Lashkar Gah, and Naway-i Barakzai districts. They rose to prominence with Dost Mohammad Shah (the British East India Company's adversary in the first Anglo-Afghan War) and furnished a string of kings through the current aspirant to the throne, Heir Apparent Ahmad Shah. Accordingly, they are one of the most respected tribes in the country.

Barech: The Barech Durrani Pashtuns mainly inhabit Dishu District. There appears to be little ethnographic literature on the Barech beyond the observations of some 19th and early 20th century British civil and military personnel (see Adamec, Historical and Political Gazetteer of Afghanistan, Vol. 5, Kandahar and South-Central Afghanistan 1980, Akademische Druck-u. Verlagsanstalt, Graz-Austria). Despite the Barech claims of Durrani kinship, there is reason to believe that the Barech have a different ethnic origin, perhaps Baloch, and transferred their ethnic/tribal identity during a shift in the power balance between the Kingdom of Afghanistan and the Emirate of Qalat.

Eshaqzai: Most numerous in the Northeast of Helmand, the Eshaqzai are strongest in Musa Qala, Sangin, and Nawzad. They are a subset of the Durrani confederation. There are also many in Farah and Herat provinces. They can be broken down into the Misrikhel (Khankhel), the Mandinzai, and the Hawazai. In the past, they were derogatorily referred to as “Sagzai,” or “vegetable people.”¹²

Kharoti: The Kharoti Powindah Ghilzais are Kuchi nomads. The Kharoti clan is the second largest Ghilzai Pashtun tribal group. Generally, they do not cooperate with anti-coalition militias or participate in their activities. Their political stance and support for the government is in part, at least, due to their rivalry with the Suleimankhel and the Waziris. Notable members of the Kharoti clan include Gulbuddin Hekmatyar and Harakat, both of Hezb-e Islami Gulbuddin (HIG). Overall, however, the Kharoti are not supportive of HIG. Former Paktika provincial governor, Ghulab Mangal, considered the Kharoti among the most reliable of Ghilzai tribal groups.¹³

Kuchis are most often Pashtuns, but occasionally some are of non-Pashtun ethnicity, such as Baluch. To be a Kuchi is not who one is, or what one does, but what one is. More than a vocation and less than a race, the Kuchi are more appropriately thought of as a caste of nomadic herdsmen. Their four main animals are sheep, goats, camels and donkeys. They cross boundaries with ease. They have a very high illiteracy rate.¹⁴ Involved in a constant and centuries old range war with the Hazara, the Kuchis have moved across Afghanistan and Pakistan for generations. Dispersed and well-traveled, they often receive news from distant relations in far-away provinces relatively quickly. The self-declared “leader” of the Kuchis is one Hashmat Ghani Ahmadzai. Partially settled by the king and the following socialist governments, they were strong supporters of the Taliban, both ideologically and pragmatically, as they came into possession of many Hazara lands thanks to the repression of the Shi’ite Hazara by the Taliban. There are estimated to be around three million Kuchi in Afghanistan, with at least 60% remaining fully nomadic and over 100,000 displaced in the South of Afghanistan due to drought in the past few years.¹⁵

Noorzai: The Noorzai Panjpai Durrani Pashtuns primarily inhabit Garmseer and Washer districts, in the Northwest and Southeast of the province. Although usually categorized and self-identified as Panjpay Durrani, many Zirk Durrani dismiss the Noorzai as Ghalji or Ghilzai, not Durrani at all. At this point in time, it is not clear whether this is a long-standing belief or has arisen out of the turmoil of the past three decades, particularly the close partnership between the Noorzai and the Ghalji-dominated Taliban leadership. Given the numbers and importance of the Noorzai in the south, this attitude may have consequences for long-term tribal politics.

Suleimankhel: Part of the Ghilzai confederation, the Suleimankhel is one of the largest sub-tribes. The bias of some sub-tribes toward the Taliban in part may be explained by their proximity to the Pakistan border and the influx of insurgents and the radical politics. They have been allied with the Hotaki in the past, and their traditional rivals include the Karoti.¹⁶ Principal sub-divisions of the Suleimankhel include the Alizai, Sulemanzai, and Jalalzai. Other sub-divisions include the Alikhel, the Nizamkhel, and the Shakhel. It is interesting to note that the Alikhel sub-tribe, which primarily lives in the northwest of Paktika, has been more cooperative with the central government and coalition forces. The Nizamkhel and

Shakhel also remain more supportive of the government, which may be explained in part by their rivalry with the Jalalzai.¹⁷

Security Landscape:

General Level of Security: Security in Helmand Province is extremely poor. The Province has long suffered from serious infiltration of anti-government forces. Opium cultivation and production forms the vast majority of the province's income, and almost every family is involved in the pernicious trade.

The districts of primary concern are:

Garmser: Bordering on Kandahar Province and Pakistan's Baluchistan Province, Garmser has seen a number of cross-border raids. The district center was overrun in November of 2007, and a number of other Afghan security force checkpoints have been attacked. In April of 2008, US Marines from the 24th Marine Expeditionary Unit moved into Garmser and launched a series of assaults against insurgent and criminal positions. The Marines initial objective was to secure the roadway that connects Garmser with Pakistan, but after a few days of skirmishes the Marines were tasked to stay longer and help quell insurgent activity throughout the district. By the following month, the Marines succeeded in restoring security to a large portion of Garmser and residents held the first community shura in years.

Greshk: Scene of intense fighting since 2006, Greshk remains a highly volatile area. A NATO offensive launched in September 2007, dubbed Operation 'Palk Wahel' ('Sledgehammer Hit'), targeted Taliban positions in the upper Greshk Valley. The operation followed the insurgent abduction of Greshk's district governor the month before. IEDs, suicide bombings, and ambushes continue to plague the district. NATO forces have launched a series of targeted strikes against Greshk insurgent leaders, including two high profile operations in November 2008 that killed Mullah Asad and Mullah Mashar.

Musa Qala: Located in northern Helmand and is one of the most unstable districts in Helmand. Taliban fighters overran the district in retaliation for the series of airstrikes that targeted their leadership in early 2007. The Taliban occupied the district for nearly 10-months before a joint Afghan-NATO operation (OP Mar Kadad Snake pit) flushed out the Taliban from the district center. President Karzai appointed Mullah Abdul Salaam, a former Musa Qala based Taliban commander, as the new district chief after Salaam laid down his arms prior to OP Snakepit. Salaam has been the target of Taliban assassins who attempted to kill him at least four times since his appointment as district governor. On January 1 2009, Taliban gunmen raided Salaam's compound killing 20 of his body guards but Salaam was not in the compound at the time of the attack. On February, an IED blast targeting Salaam's convoy killed six of his bodyguards.

Lashkargah: The capital of Helmand has endured sporadic periods of violence over the last two years. Suicide bombings and IEDs have both infrequently occurred in Lashkargah. During the late hours of October 12 2008, an estimated 170 insurgents attacked Lashkargah from three sides resulting in widespread fighting that lasted half of a day. NATO airstrikes pounded insurgent positions killing scores of fighters and repulsed the attack.

Kajaki: Sandwiched between Musa Qala, Sangin and Baghran districts, the Kajaki district is home to the legendary Kajaki dam complex. Decades of neglect and warfare has left most of the complex in need of a serious overhaul. International efforts to restore the dam's critical turbine components has come in spurts and the high level of insecurity in Kajaki and surrounding districts has further stalled the dam's refurbishment.

¹⁷ US Department of State Gardez Provincial Reconstruction Team Political Officer Reporting, 2004.

Sangin: The Upper Sangin Valley has seen heavy fighting since 2006. US and British forces pushed out large numbers of insurgents from the Valley during a three-day operation in April 2007 following months of large scale engagements. Some security improvements in Sangin were visible by the summer of 2008. The main bazaar in Sangin is open, police check points have been constructed and the town's main mosque is being renovated. Security outside the town's center remains elusive as insurgents and drug traffickers continue to launch IED and mine attacks, ambushes and the occasional suicide bombing. British forward operating bases north and south of Sangin's district center are attacked nearly every day. On February 7, over 700 British Royal Marines partook in Operation Diesel in the Sangin Valley, destroying scores of secret drug labs and bomb factories. Officials later estimated the raw opium and chemicals destroyed during the raid at around £50million

DISTRICTS

The districts of Helmand Province are nebulous. At present the thirteen districts of Helmand are Dishu, Garmser, Reg, Nad Ali, Nawai Barakzai, Lashkar Gah, Nahrisarraj, Sangin, Washer, Naw Zad, Musa Qala, Kajaki, and Baghran.
